

Dear FCC,
5/6/2011

My name is Sara Manley-Miller. I am writing this letter because I do not approve of AT&T buying T-Mobile USA. I have been a customer of both companies, and Cingular before AT&T bought them too. I have been with T-Mobile the longest though; one week after I turned 18. First off, this deal is not fair to the some 39 million T-Mobile customers, many who are considered loyal customers according to T-Mobile. I never drop a call; I hardly ever have to call customer service because I do not have problems with my phones. I have heard time and time again from AT&T customers that they hate the service they receive and that their bill is never the same each month. There is nothing wrong with T-Mobile. What ever happened to the saying "If it isn't broken, don't fix it."? From all the information I have gathered is that the parent company just doesn't want to have a business in the US anymore. That is enough reason to sell out some 39 million customers to a company they want nothing to do with? The customers are the one who support these businesses, and without us they wouldn't be around. I feel because of that, the customers should have a say. If AT&T buys T-Mobile, I will not go to another carrier, I will simply never have a phone again, as I will no longer trust phone companies. How many companies does AT&T have to buy before you stop them? I know I am not the only one who feels like this. AT&T keeps saying how good this merge will be for everyone but I am pretty sure that if it goes through a lot more people are going to go without phones. What is the point of paying $220 a month if that company can just sell you out at any given time? The last thing I want to say is before this was announced; T-Mobile's slogan was T-Mobile: Stick Together. I would like to see that actually happen though, not just spoken.
